

OACHE Conference 2009

Phone to Flickr to Twitter to Facebook: One-step updating!

To get started:

- Get yourself a Flickr account. <http://www.flickr.com>
- Get yourself a Twitter account. <http://twitter.com/>
- Later, when you have time you can also get yourself a Facebook account at <http://www.facebook.com>
- Download and install a Twitter client for your web browser:
  - TwitterFox (<http://twitterfox.net/>)
  - BeTwittered on your iGoogle Home Page (<http://www.google.com/ig>)

Set up Flickr to post pics via email

- Once you have a Flickr account, you need to set it up to allow you to email pics to your account. Log in to Flickr, and then go to <http://www.flickr.com/account/uploadbyemail/>.
- Follow the directions to set up an email address that is associated with your account. Keep this email address private – it should not be shared with anyone.

Link Flickr to Twitter

- Click on your account (your username at the the upper right)

- Click on the tab for "Extending Flickr"

The screenshot shows the Flickr 'Your account' page. At the top, there are navigation tabs: Home, You, Organize, Contacts, Groups, Explore, and Search. Below the tabs is the 'Your account' title and a sub-header 'Personal information'. Under this sub-header, there are several sections: 'Your Flickr account', 'Your safety level', 'Your buddy icon', 'Your screen name', 'Your profile', and 'Your Flickr web addresses'. An arrow points to the 'Extending Flickr' tab in the top navigation bar.

Click the link to "Configure your Flickr-to-blog settings"

This screenshot shows the 'Your account' page with the 'Extending Flickr' tab selected. The page content includes sections for 'Your printing location', 'Account links', 'Your blogs', and 'Your Facebook account'. An arrow points to a link in the 'Your blogs' section that says "Configure your Flickr-to-blog settings". Below this, there is a section for 'Your Facebook account' with a link to "Link your applications to share your Flickr updates on Facebook."

From the makers of Zombies comes Vampires! Kind of like Zombies. Except that the vampires are hot. VERY hot. Also - you can fight Zombies, Vampires and Werewolves now!

Bite your friends and make them zombies! Mmmmm... Brains! Also - you can fight Zombies, Vampires and Werewolves now!

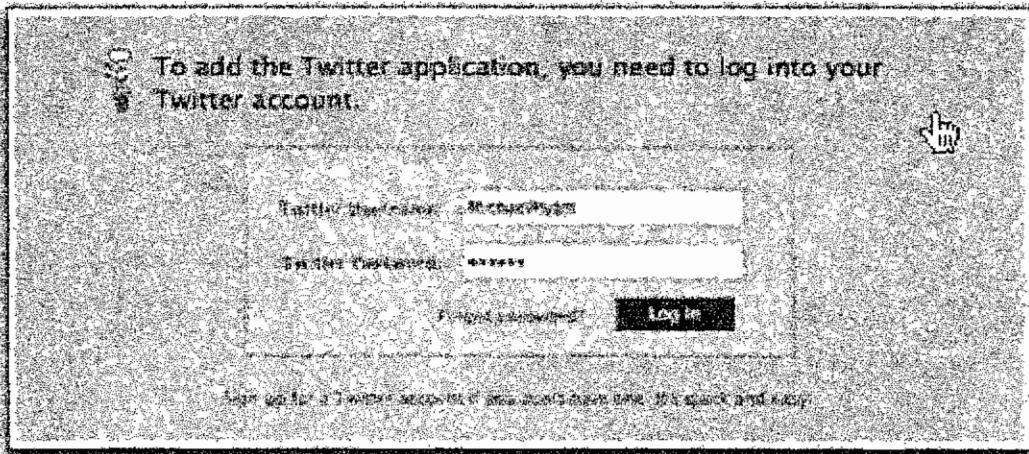

1. Make sure you are logged into Facebook. Now go to the Facebook's Twitter application page. Now click on the Go to Application button. It looks like this:

2. The application will now ask you to confirm that Twitter can access your Facebook information. Click on the Allow button.

3. Now log into your Twitter account by entering your Twitter username and password. The screen looks similar to this:

Click on the Login button.

4. You can now actually use Twitter from within Facebook. The screen looks like this:

Personally, I never use this. I want the reverse of this. I want to update my Facebook status from Twitter. Therefore, click on the Allow Twitter to Update Your Facebook Status button in the upper-right of the screen.

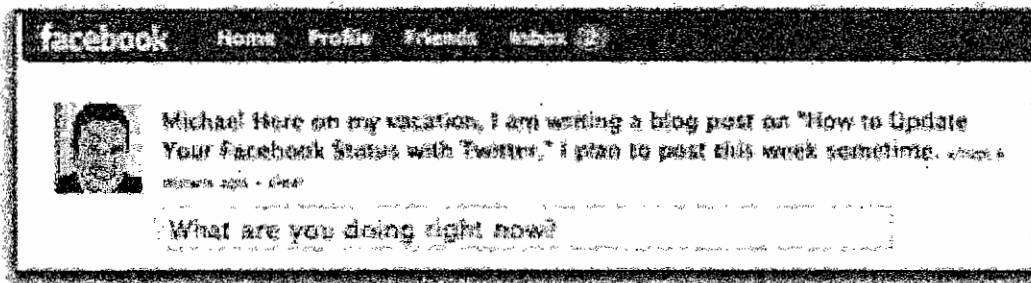

5. You should get a confirmation screen that looks similar to this:

Now confirm that you are willing to let Twitter update your Facebook status by clicking the Allow Status Updates button.

6. After you click this button, you will go to the Twitter application. Don't Twitter anything from here. Instead, go to your Facebook Home page, by clicking the Home link on the Facebook menu.

Now you can test the connection by going to your favorite Twitter application or the Twitter web page and entering a tweet. Wait a minute or two and go back to your Facebook home page and refreshing it. Your most recent tweet should be displayed as your Facebook status. This is how my status looked:

That's all there is to it. Now every time you Twitter something, your Facebook status will be automatically updated.

Update: If you don't want to send every one of your tweets to Facebook, then check out Selective Twitter Status. It allows you to designate the tweets you want to appear on Facebook by end a tweet with the #fb "hashtag" in your post. Only those tweets with the hash tag at the end will be posted on Facebook.
